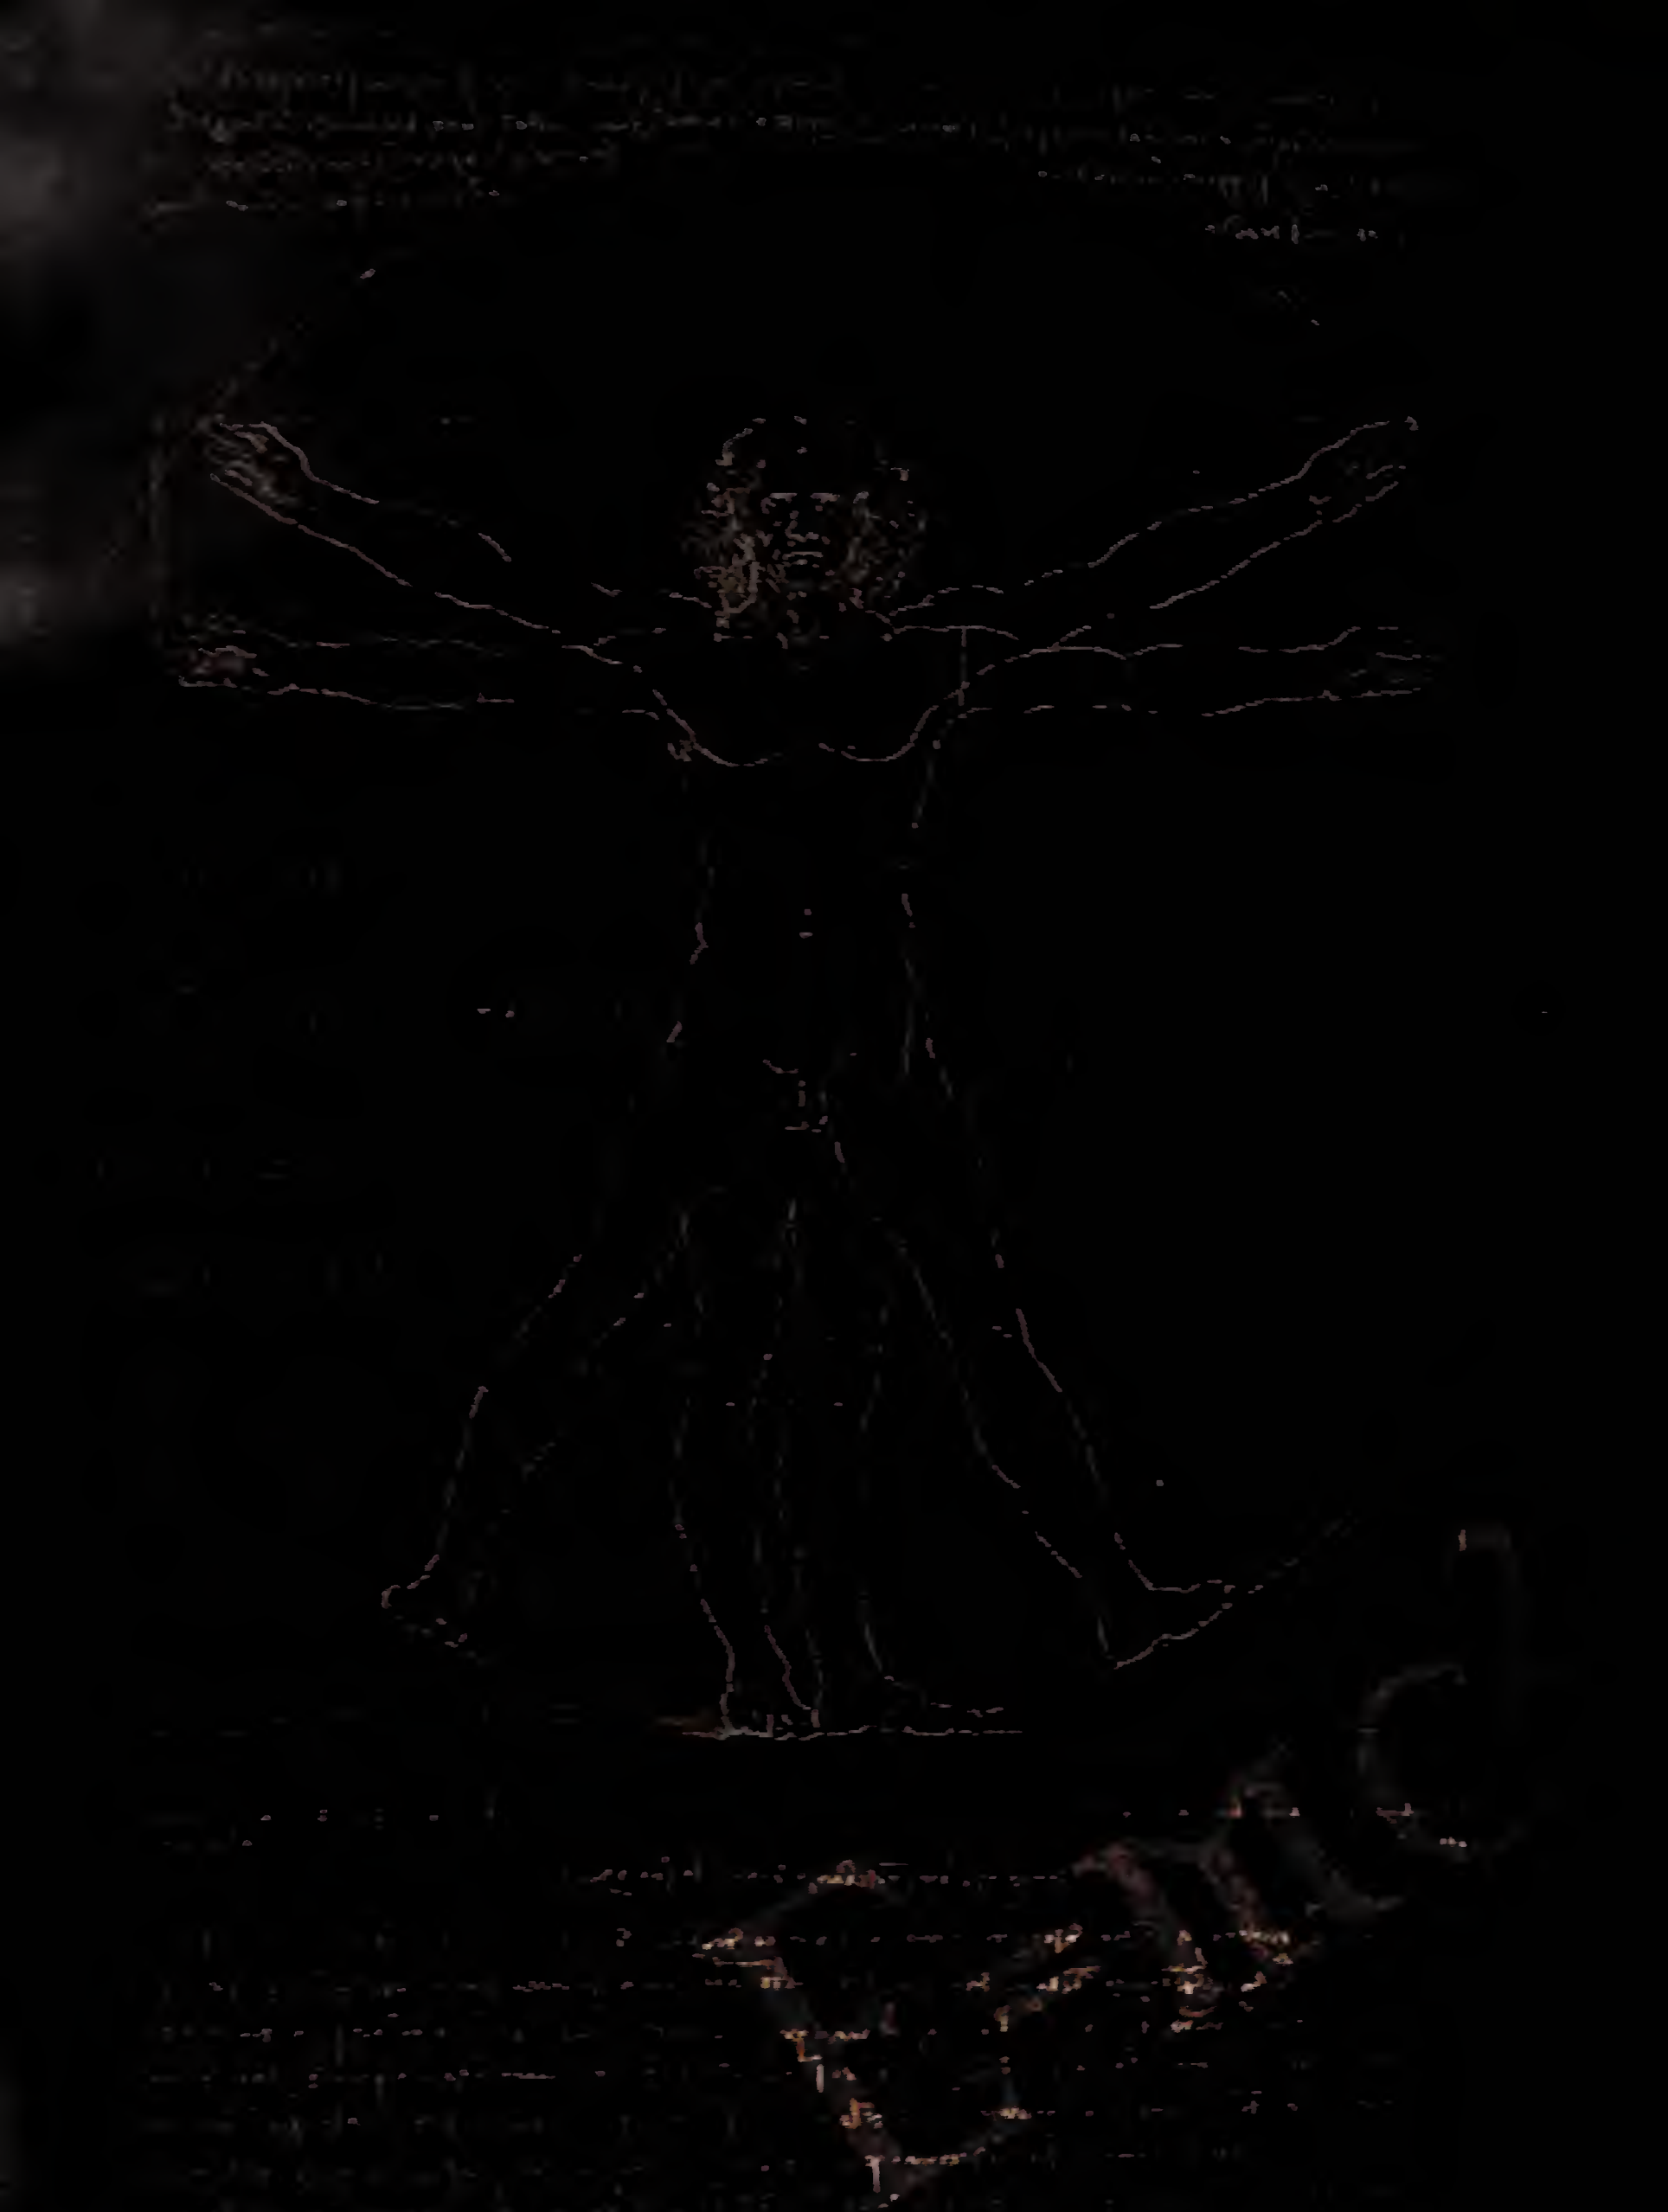
MVRHS

You are holding in your hands the new and improved MVRHS yearbook. Before you go any further, we would just like to extend a warning. This is not the typical yearbook. Firstly, as you may be noticing it is in color, and not just purple and white, but all the colors of the rainbow. Which leads to our next point; this yearbook does not contain the typical amount of purple, white, or tradition. Rather it strives to break lose from the chains of 47 years of tradition. But don't get too alarmed, this book does not seek to do away with tradition altogether, only with monotony. You will still be able to look back on this book in 50 years and be able to see who played football, and who did chess club. But that will be then, and this is now, so turn the page, and venture on, for you are about to embark on a fantastic journey. . .



Wisdom

MANY HUNDREDS OF YEARS AGO, a young king desired wisdom. He called upon his philosopher, mathematician, physician, historian, storyteller and fool, and challenged them to research and write a complete history of humankind.

"Leave out nothing of significance," he explained.

After thirty years of painstaking effort, the advisors presented the now middle-aged king a vast library filled with leather-clad volumes. It contained the fruits of their labors.

The ruler was as exasperated as he was pleased.

"I'm far too busy to read so many books," he explained. "Thus, I offer a second challenge. Distill all that you've learned into a single book."

Another twenty years were required to accomplish the task. At last, the thick volume, containing a condensed version of humankind knowledge throughout time, was presented to the now elderly and failing king.

"I'm too old and my eyes too weak to read such a heavy tome," he said. "My third challenge is for the storyteller. Tell me the story of this book. Give me the wisdom of humankind before I take my final breath.

The storyteller agreed. He paused, and thought. Finally he said "They were born. They lived. They knew sorrow. They knew joy. They died. We learn."

Dylan McCarthy

Dylan McCarthy is a Freshman at the Martha's Vineyard Regional High School. He graduated from the Oak Bluffs elementary School and loves the freedom of high school.

Q. What do you do after school?
A. I was in the school musical Camalot. I played minor parts but it was fun. I acted in the Oak Bluffs school too. We preformed Guys and Dolls and the Wizard of Oz.

Q. Who is your favorite teacher?
A. Ms. Kurtz.

Q. What is your favorite class?
A. English and Guitar.

Q. Is there anyone who has inspired you in high school?
A. Mr. Tinus.

Q. If you were given $1,000,000 to change the school, what would you do?

A. I would increase the food quality and raise the teacher's salaries.

Mark Reppert

Mark Reppert is a Sophomore at MVRHS. He moved from White Planes, New York to Martha's Vineyard this year. If Mark wasn't in school, he would be traveling across Europe.

Q. What's the biggest difference between MVRHS and your school in New York?
A. They are actually about the same size. I miss my friends and being near the city the most.

Q. What is your favorite class?
A. French

Q. Are you a part of any clubs or sports?
A. I play basketball.

Q. Who has influenced you the most?
A. Probably my Parents and my Grandmother.

Q. If you were given $1,000,000 to improve our school, what would you do?
A. I would build a swimming pool and a rock climbing wall.

The Princes Who

Once there was a wise and virtuous king who had three sons who were all blockheads. They not only knew nothing, but if anyone tried to teach them they closed their ears and minds and sat there as dumb as logs. Their father was in despair. At last he called his councilors together, and told them the grief of his heart.

"What am I to do?"

When the councilors suggested the usual dry-as-dust methods of education, the king groaned "I tried that long ago!"

At last a counselor asked, "Why not trust them to Vishnusharma, the venerable sage? It is said that he is so full of wisdom that he can make even the greatest truths clear to the mind of a child."

So the old man was summoned from his hermitage in the forest, and the king said, "I pray you, O Vishnusharma, Waken the sleeping minds of my three sons. Do this and I will reward you with 300 parcels of land."

The sage replied "I have no desire for land, but I would gladly attempt to awaken the sleeping minds of your three sons."

Thus it came about that the three princes who were blockheads, and proud of it, never suspected that the sage who made his home in a corner of the palace garden was brought there as a teacher. And as the old man went about his simple life they watched, and wondered about him.

One day the youngest prince asked the sage if there were lions and tigers where he had made his hermitage in the forest. The old man replied that there were, and quite by accident it seemed, he rambled off into a story about a lion. The princes listened with there eyes and minds wide open and sat as alert as a cat about to spring upon a mouse, for the lazy blockheads liked to be entertained and never expected that they could be made to learn from a story.

Were Blockheads

Now the first story ended in such a way that it hooked into another like a link in a chain, and the princes leaned forward and cried "How is that? How is that?"

So the sage told the second story, and the princes made him promise to go on the next day. The old man chose stories full of laughter, common sense and wisdom. He sprinkled them generously with many a wise saying and literary quotation. And when the first chain of stories ended the princes rocked their heads with laughter and cried "That was just right, that was just right!" They begged and begged him to tell the stories again and again until they knew every word by heart.

The sage began on another string of stories, and at the end of six months the princes who were blockheads and proud of it, knew every word of five chains of stories, and many a wise saying from literature. And their ears and their minds were permanently wide open, and they were alert as three cats ready to spring upon a mouse. And it was realized by all that the three princes had ceased to be blockheads, and were now well prepared to take an active part in the ruling of the kingdom.

Faculty Profile

Tom Church has lived on Martha's Vineyard for twenty-three years and counting, and is currently the director of the Custodial staff here at MVRHS. As a young boy, he would come to visit his aunt who still lives here on Martha's Vineyard. During one of his visits he met his wife, Sherri. She grew up here, and now works as a Teaching Assistant / Work Study director at MVRHS. Mr.. Church has lived in numerous places around the globe including Australia, the Midwest and Los Angeles. Mr. Church moved to Martha's Vineyard for his kids to receive a good education at the high school and his wife's love for the island. He hasn't just been a custodian at the high school, he has worked many jobs, mostly in maintenance.

When asked why he wanted to be a custodian, he said, " I didn't plan it. When the opportunity came, I took it." He said he loves to work and interact with the staff and students on a daily basis. Sometimes he gets a T.A. for a day to help him out. As the director of the custodial staff, Mr. Church organizes when things should get fixed, does odd jobs, makes schedules for the other custodians, talks to contractors and organizes big projects like fixing roofs. He has to make sure everything gets done.

The custodial staff has to cover all school grounds including the eighteen-acre sports fields. Being a custodian isn't easy; they encounter skunks, crickets and sometimes mice. There are no set vacations and weekends off. After his custodial days are over, Mr. Church plans on moving to a warm climate where he can relax from his hard working, but he will not forget memorable days as custodial director here at MVRHS

Thumbling's

A certain tailor had a son, who happened to be small, and no bigger than a thumb, and on this account he was always called Thumbling. He had, however, some courage in him, and said to his father, "Father, I must and will go out into the world."

The little tailor journeyed on and came to a forest, and there he fell in with a band of robbers who had a design to steal the King's treasure. When they saw the little tailor, they thought, "A little fellow like that can creep through a key-hole." "Hollo," cried one of them, "wilt thou go to the treasure-chamber with us? Thou canst slip thyself in and throw out the money." Thumbling reflected a while, and he said, "yes." Then he looked at the doors, to see if there were any cracks in them. It was not long before he espied one which was broad enough. He was therefore about to get in, but one of the sentries who observed him, and said to the other, "What an ugly spider; I will kill it." "Let the creature alone," said the other. Then Thumbling got through the crevice into the treasure-chamber, opened the window beneath which the robbers were standing, and threw out to them one thaler after another. When the little tailor was in the full swing of his work, he heard the King coming, and crept into a hiding-place. The King noticed that several thalers were missing, but could not conceive who could have stolen them. Then he went away again, and said to the sentries, "Be on the watch." Thumbling recommenced his labours, they heard the money moving, and a sound of klink, klink, klink. They ran in to seize the thief, but the little tailor, was swifter, and leapt into a corner and covered himself with a thaler, and at the same time he mocked the sentries and cried, "Here am I!" The sentries ran thither, but as they got there, he had already hopped into another corner under a thaler, and was crying, "Ho, ho, here am I!" The watchmen sprang there in haste, but Thumbling had long ago got into a third corner, and was crying, "Ho, ho, here am I!" And thus he made fools of them, and drove them so long round about the treasure-chamber that they were weary and went away. Then by degrees he threw all the thalers out, dispatching the last with all his might, then hopped nimbly upon it, and flew down with it through the window. The robbers paid him great compliments. "Thou art a valiant hero," said they; "wilt thou be our captain?"

Thumbling declined, and said he wanted to see the world. They divided the booty, but the little tailor only asked for a kreuzer because he could not carry more.

Then he once more buckled on his sword, bade the robbers goodbye, and took to the road. First, he went to work with some masters, but he had no liking for that, and at last he hired himself as man-servant in an inn. The maids, could not endure him, for he saw all they did secretly, and he told their master what they had taken off the plates, and carried away out of the cellar, for themselves. Then said they, "Wait, and we will pay thee off!" and arranged with each other to play him a trick. Soon afterwards when one of the maids was mowing in the garden, and saw Thumbling jumping and creeping up and down the plants, she mowed him up, tied all in a cloth, and threw it to the cows. Amongst them there was a black one, who swallowed him. Down below, it pleased him ill, for it was dark, neither was any candle burning. When the cow was being milked he cried,

Travels

"Strip, strap, strull,
Will the pail soon be full?"

But the noise of the milking prevented his being understood. After this the master of the house came into the cow-byre and said, "That cow shall be killed tomorrow." Then Thumbling was so alarmed that he cried out "Let me out, for I am shut up inside her." The master heard that but did not know from whence the voice came. "Where art thou?" asked he. "In the black one," answered Thumbling, but the master did not understand what that meant, and went out.

Next morning the cow was killed. Thumbling did not meet with one blow at the chopping. And when the butcher came in, he cried, "Don't chop too deep, I am amongst it." No one heard this. Now Thumbling was in trouble, but trouble sharpens the wits, and he sprang out so adroitly between the blows that none of them touched him, and he escaped. But he could not get away, there was nothing for it but to let himself be thrust into a black-pudding. He was confined, and besides that he was hung up in the chimney.

In winter he was taken down, as the pudding had to be set before a guest. When the hostess was cutting it, he took care not to stretch out his head lest it should be cut off; at last he cleared a passage for himself, and jumped out.

The little tailor, however, would not stay in a house where he fared so ill, so he set out again. In the open country he met with a fox who snapped him up in a fit. "Mr. Fox," cried the little tailor, "set me at liberty again." "Thou art right," answered the fox. "Thou art nothing for me, if thou wilt promise me the fowls in thy father's yard I will let thee go." "Yes" replied Thumbling. Then the fox let him go again, and himself carried him home. When the father once more saw his dear son, he willingly gave the fox all the fowls which he had. "For this I likewise bring thee a handsome bit of money," said Thumbling, and gave his father the kreuzer which he earned on his travels.

"But why did the fox get the poor chickens to eat?" "Oh, you goose, your father would surely love his child far more than the fowls in the yard!"

Kenia Rodrigues is one of 181 freshman here at MVRHS. Born in Boston, she moved back to her home country of Brazil when she was a young child. Three years ago, Kenia moved back to Massachusetts, this time to Martha's Vineyard. "My father had a lot of friends here" she said when asked why her family chose Martha's Vineyard as a place to move to. At the Oak Bluffs school, Kenia learned English through the ESL program. Now she can speak fluently. Coming to the high school, she felt a little intimidated. But she now finds that she loves all of her classes and is looking forward to being a part of theater this year. Having many friends already at MVRHS, she feels more comfortable and she hopes her freshman year will be a big success.

Justin Mercier is a freshman and the President of the Class of 2010. Coming from the Edgartown school, Justin feels excited to be entering his first year of high school. He is looking forward to playing basketball and reconnecting with friends from other schools. Although he is a freshman, he knows some high school students through his sister, Nicole, who is a sophomore here at MVRHS. He feels this school is safe and teachers will give him a good education. As a senior, Justin wants to be prepared to take on any challenges he will encounter in the future and win the state tournament in basketball.

Freshmen Life

It's Freezing Out Today
By Dylan McCarthy

I am fourteen.
Change is always permanent.
The girl of my dreams doesn't exist
And most likely never will.
Is there
Something more?
Not a memory
To remember.
And nothing amazing happens here
But you get used to that.

I guarantee I won't sleep
For a month.
Everything should just stop
We could all use a break.
Why rush?
It's only wasting time.
Suppose everyone just gets up and leaves me
That's okay,
Because real friends don't do that.
And nothing amazing happens here
But you get used to that.

I wish I knew
What to wish for.
And how to stand up for myself.
People make me sick in general.
And growing up disappoints me.
Maybe someday I'll stop wasting time.
And nothing amazing happens here

Kirsty is currently a sophomore and lives with her parents. High school is halfway over for her, only two more years. Kirsty looks forward to exploring the world after high school. She was born in Devon, England and moved to Florida at age 3. At age 5 she moved to the island. Outside of school she loves to dance, sing loudly, and pretend she's in STOMP. Sometimes when she's nervous she peels her nail polish off, and draws on herself way to much. Music is a big part of her life. Cat Power is one of her favorite artists. Unfortunately she isn't very skilled with instruments. Kirsty is influenced, like everyone else, by her peers. Her mom also has a big influence on her. Mocha Motts is the preferred hang out for her outside of school. Go in there on any given day, and there's a good chance you'll run into her! Spontaneity is one of her best traits.

Kirsty Watt

Arno is currently a sophomore, and intends to go to college after he graduates. He's only 16 so he has time to decide what to major in. Most of his classes at school interest him to some extent, but he'll admit several of them are unnecessary. His interests outside of school range from guitar lessons to photography and dark room. Arno enjoys everything from trance to folk music. The guitar has been a big part of his life for the last 4 years. Occasionally he'll try his hand at piano, too. His family consists of his older brother in college, and parents. They own a dock building company, which he might take over later on in life. The spontaneity of life seems to appeal to him right now. Take a look around the island, and you might find Arno at friend's houses, or strolling along the beach or woods. Maybe you'll be lucky and he'll have his camera.

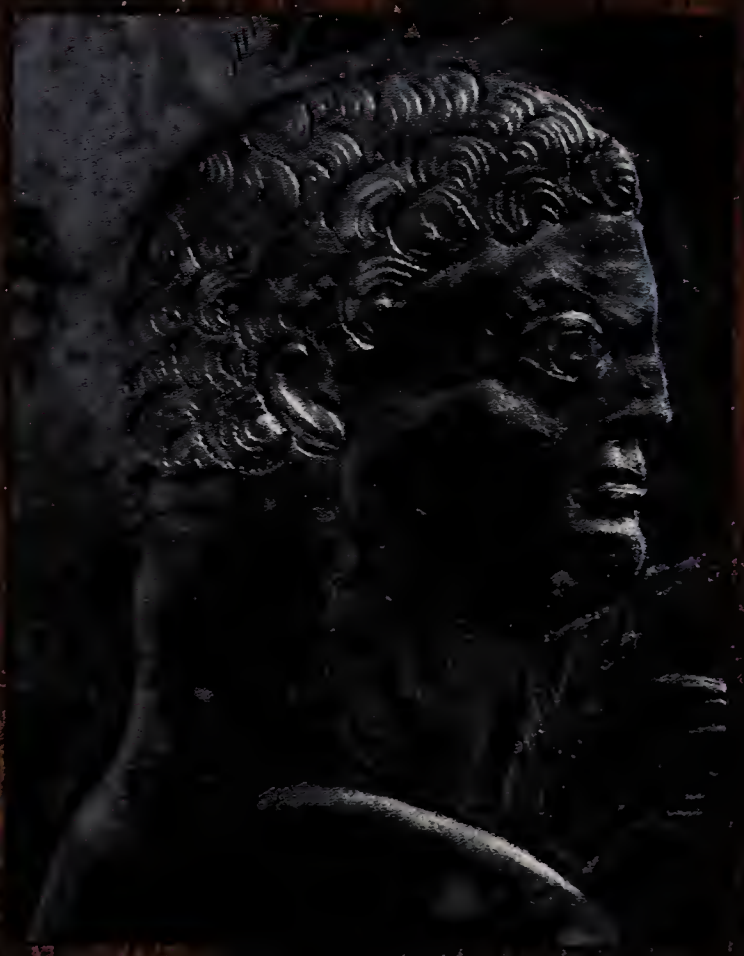
Hercules and the

After completing his twelve labors, Hercules hit the road, once again. Somehow or another, Hercules caught wind that Eurytus, the prince of Oechalia, was offering his beautiful daughter, Iole, as a bride prize to any man who could best him and his sons in an archery contest. Upon hearing this, Hercules traveled to Oechalia and competed against Eurytus and his sons. Legend has it that Eurytus was the man who first schooled Hercules in the use of the bow. His was a challenge that pitted student against teacher. It should come as no surprise that Hercules defeated his fellow contestants with ease.

When it came time, however, for Eurytus to hand over Iole to Hercules, as his bride, Eurytus refused. In this decision he was supported by all of his sons except Iphytus. One may wonder why a prince would deny the strongest man in the world his daughter in marriage. For Eurytus, the reasoning was simple: he would not allow his beloved daughter to marry a man who had a history of murdering his sons in a fit of rage, for fear that the same fate would befall his own grandchildren.



Crestfallen and dismayed, Hercules left Oechalia. Shortly after Hercules' departure, some cattle were stolen by Autolycus from a local man. Eurytus instantly thought that Hercules was the culprit. Iphytus, however, refused to believe that Hercules was the thief and set out to pay him a visit at Tiryns. Hercules received Iphytus in good cheer and the two men passed the time entertaining each other. Unfortunately for Iphytus, however, during the visit something went awry, and Hercules, in another fit of madness, hurled Iphytus to his death from the top of the walls of Tiryns.

Following the murder of Iphytus, Hercules contracted a terrible disease, as a result of his violent outburst. Hercules then journeyed to the oracle at Delphi, in hopes that the priestess there would advise him on how to cure himself. But Hercules was to be disappointed. When he questioned the Pythian priestess, she was unable to answer him in oracles. Hercules, outraged at priestesses unwillingness to help, began tearing the temple apart. When Hercules came upon the Delphic tripod, he started to make off with it, thinking that he would establish an oracle of his own.

Apollo, however, was not about to let Hercules carry off the prized tripod from his sacred site. He began to wrestle with Hercules over its possession; Apollo was supported by his sister, Artemis, while Hercules was supported by his patron, Athena. In the midst of their tug-of-war contest, Zeus dropped in and tried to break up the feuding brothers. And as parents are often forced to do, Zeus decided that it would be best to separate the brothers, hurling one of his mighty thunderbolts between them. After the two siblings were pried apart, Hercules finally received an oracle, instructing him to be sold into slavery for a year, and to pay Eurytus in compensation for the loss of his son. The tripod remained at Delphi and Hermes sold Hercules to Omphale, Queen of Lydia, for whom he performed women's work for his year of servitude.

Athlete Profiles

Hannah VanOsten

Hannah Van Osten has always been active. She is the girl constantly fighting to break the stereotype that "boys are more athletic." With this in mind and the encouragement from her mom, Hannah fell in love with athletics at a young age. She has become a star player in many of the sports she participates in. For half of her high school career Hannah was a three season athlete: which entails a lot of dedication and commitment. However, she does not find it challenging to complete her school work with late practices and early dismissals. "I'm someone that gets my work done no matter what it takes. If I miss a class I will find out what I owe!" When asked to recall a game that will forever stay in her memory, Hannah remembers the 2006 Field Hockey game versus Nantucket. "We had been ahead the whole game and in the last two minutes they scored. Tying the game 1-1. It was just really intense."

During the Field Hockey season sophomore year, Hannah endured a strenuous injury to her back. "I was running down the field after the ball and had to come to a quick stop. All of a sudden my back went into intense spasms and I could hardly walk off the field." After the game Hannah went to the hospital and found she had pinched her sciatica nerve. She was unable to participate , in practices or games for about a week. Even now, two years later, Hannahs' back bothers her once in a while.

Hannah is an all around team player, and this spirit is what encourages her to play. "The sports teams I participate in are a great outlet of positive energy and I love the team spirit!"

Ben Post

When you were five years old everyone on youth soccer was in your kindergarten class. However, it is unusual now a days to look around the soccer team and recognize seniors who have been dedicated to the sport for 13 plus years. Ben Post is one of those guys. "I like playing soccer because it's a game where you can improvise and coaches don't control every play that happens," Ben says. Originally Ben started playing soccer and basketball because his older brother played, and he wanted to get involved. When asked about a specific game that will stay in his mind forever, Ben says he has hundreds that stick out. However he was able to narrow it down to two. "Last year when we beat undefeated Seekonk at home in basketball was one of the best games I've been a part of. As for soccer, I'll never forget going undefeated in the Las Vegas Premier Invitational tournament and just being in Las Vegas with all of my friends." Ben has made many of his best friends through sports, and being able to travel all over the country with them is another perk of playing sports. At times Ben finds it hard to juggle school work with late practices and games, "especially when all my teachers pile on work at the same time," he says. In the MIAA tournament second round game, against Higham Harbormen, Ben endoured a very painful injury. He completely dislocated his shoulder towards the end of the second half. This is the only injury Ben has had in high school he considers himself lucky. "Sports have always played a huge role in my life and I'd like for that to continue."

With the help of the Vineyard Baseball Park Project Committee, a new major league sized baseball field has been constructed on the east side of Sanderson Lane where the school property abuts the State Forest. If all goes as planned, the new baseball field could attract baseball teams from the Cape Cod Baseball League, where many current major league players got their start. Although the field may draw such star players, it is primarily being constructed for the high school varsity baseball team. “The old field is sub par,” said coach Simmons. “The driving force has been that I have always wanted to run my own baseball program and I want the field done first-class.”-Jen Amazeen, High School View

This year, in honor of "spirit week", the week leading up to the Nantucket football game, MVRHS hosted its first annual girls flag football game. This was the final event of the week long display of school spirit, culminating with MVRHS's overwhelming 47-22 win over Nantucket. The girls flag football game pitted Juniors against Seniors, with the Seniors winning 2-0 on a safety.

The Three

A count once lived in Switzerland, who had an only son, but he could learn nothing. Then said the father: 'Hark you, my son, I can get nothing into your head. You must go from hence, I will give you into the care of a master, who shall see what he can do with you.' The youth was sent into a town, and remained a year with the master. At the end of this he came home again, and his father asked: 'Now, what have you learnt?' 'I have learnt what the dogs say when they bark.' 'Lord have mercy on us!' cried the father; 'is that all you have learnt? I will send you into another town, to another master.' The youth was taken, and stayed a year with this master likewise. When he came back the father again asked: 'My son, what have you learnt?' He answered: 'Father, I have learnt what the birds say.' Then the father fell into a rage and said: 'Oh, you lost man, you have spent the precious time and learnt nothing; are you not ashamed to appear before my eyes? I will send you to a third master, but if you learn nothing this time also, I will no longer be your father.' The youth remained a whole year with the third master also, and when he came home again, and his father inquired: 'My son, what have you learnt?' he answered: 'Dear father, I have this year learnt what the frogs croak.' Then the father fell into anger, sprang up, called his people thither and said: 'This man is no longer my son, I command you to take him into the forest, and kill him.' They took him forth, but when they should have killed him, they could not do it for pity, and let him go.

The youth wandered on, and after some time came to a fortress where he begged for a night's lodging. 'Yes,' said the lord of the castle, 'if you will pass the night down there in the old tower, go thither; but I warn you, it is at the peril of your life, for it is full of wild dogs, which bark and howl without stopping, and at certain hours a man has to be given to them, whom they at once devour.' The whole district was in sorrow and dismay because of them, and yet no one could do anything to stop this. The youth, however, was without fear, and said: 'Just let me go down to the barking dogs, and give me something that I can throw to them; they will do nothing to harm me.' As he himself would have it so, they gave him some food for the wild animals, and led him down to the tower. When he went inside, the dogs did not bark at him, but wagged their tails quite amicably around him, ate what he set before them, and did not hurt one hair of his head. Next morning, to the astonishment of everyone, he came out again safe and unharmed, and said to the lord of the castle: 'The dogs have revealed to me in their own language, why they dwell there, and bring evil on the land. They are bewitched and are obliged to watch over a great treasure which is below in the tower, and they can have no rest until it is taken away, and I have likewise learnt, from their discourse, how that is to be done.' Then all who heard this rejoiced, and the lord of the castle said he would adopt him as a son if he accomplished it successfully. He went down again, and as he knew what he had to do, he did it thoroughly, and brought a chest full of gold out with him. The howling of the wild dogs was henceforth heard no more; they had disappeared, and the country was freed from the trouble.

After some time he took it in his head that he would travel to Rome. On the way he passed by a marsh, in which a number of frogs were sitting croaking. He listened to them, and when he became aware of what they were saying, he grew ry thoughtful and sad. At last he arrived in Rome, where the King had just died, and ere was great doubt among the noble men as to whom they should appoint as his successor.

ney at length agreed that the person should be chosen as king who should be distinguished some divine and miraculous token. And just as that was decided on, the young count tered into the court, and suddenly two snow-white doves flew on s shoulders and remained sitting there. The ecclesiastics recognized erein the token from above, and asked him on the spot if he would king. He was undecided, and knew not if he were worthy of this, t the doves counselled him to do it, and at length he said yes. Then as he anointed and consecrated, and thus was fulfilled what he had ard from the frogs on his way, which had so affected him, that he as to be his mightiness the king. Then he had to speak a coronary eech to the kingdom, and did not know one word of it, but the two ves sat continually on his shoul- ders, and said it all in his ear.

Happiest people in the world!

We laugh; we express our feelings, we show how we are,
and we are proud of who we are!
We are Friends! We are BRAZILIANS with pride!

Coming to America

I am from Espirito Santo. My travels begin by taking a two hour bus ride to Sao Paulo. I traveled with my mother and four friends. I met my guide who was going to get me on the plane that would take me to Mexico. In Mexico I was to meet my Coyote. A Coyote is a person who takes you across the fronteira, the border. When we got off the plane in Mexico we had to look for a guy who was holding a piece of paper with a strange name printed on it. We were given a name before we left for Mexico and we just had to look for this name when we arrived and there we would meet our Coyote.

I am not going to get into all the details of my trip, but the two words that come to my mind are worried and nervous. You never know if your Coyote is going to be mean and dangerous or if he is going to be kind and sympathetic. We had to pay a lot of money to come to this country, ten thousand American dollars per person. We always have to look for dangerous animals like snakes. We had to cross a river that was about the size of the Cape Cod Canal and I was nervous for my mother. I actually had to help our Coyote because he got very tired halfway across the river and I needed to help him finish his swim. I was so happy when we got to the other side and we had a party to celebrate.

I understand what I did was against the law according to the American government but you have to understand why this is being done. It is not that I am trying to cheat America and Americans. I want to have all the same responsibilities as the Americans, including taxes. A lot of the Brazilians see an illusion. When we are in Brazil we see all the really great things in America and all the rich people with big expensive cars and houses and boats and planes. We see the security and the safe neighborhoods and good education. The amount of technology in EACH classroom in Martha's Vineyard is more than some of the schools in Brazil. The school here is comfortable. It's a school, but sometimes you forget that. There is an activity for every person in this school. I cannot believe the amount of activities and sports in America. This is what we see and hear back in Brazil. Brazil is not horrible. We have poor people and corruption, just like every country, but it is what America offers that is so attractive. We have a good life in Brazil, but in America we make great money and we have a better quality of life. Getting things like iPods, sneakers, cell phones, PS2, XBOX, cars are so easy to get here. It is so difficult to get even one of these things in Brazil. You can get them, but they are so expensive. If I wanted to get a Dodge Minivan it would cost me $75,000.00 in Brazil. If I wanted to get a PS2 it would cost $500 and the PS3 would be $1500 in Brazil. America has made it very easy to get things and people have everything. I am not going to say what Americans think about this because I am not them, but for me I am so grateful for this. I can get these things as a teenager. Sometimes I feel bad for my family back in Brazil because I make more money than them and have more than them and I am not even working full time, they are.

The problem now is that the Brazilians are the new immigrant population and with that comes discrimination. My teacher told me that there used to be signs for the Irish not to apply and that all the Italians were mobsters and that his grandfather used to be called a stupid and poor because his last name ended with "s-k-i." I think we can make this better by legalizing the illegals and making them a part of the American community. The immigrants have a lot to offer and this country's foundation is built upon immigrants. American culture is a collage of all the cultures in this world and to go against that is anti-American. America is unique in that it doesn't have an established tradition like many other countries, but a tradition that has been pieced together throughout the years and added to by each new immigrant population coming to the United States. The Brazilians have a lot of their culture to bring and it is fun. We love to party, in fact, we like to party every weekend. We love dance and music and sharing stories. We work hard and are very grateful for what we have. We have a lot to give to America and we just want the opportunity. We hear that America is the land of opportunity. Is it a cliché? I have faith that it is not.

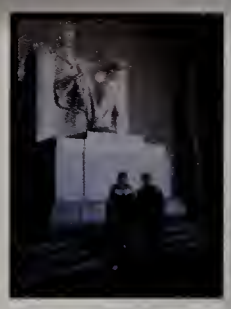
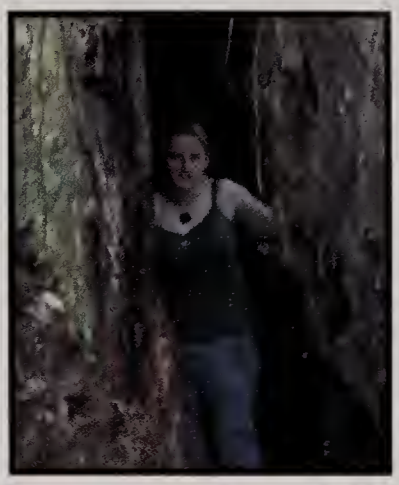
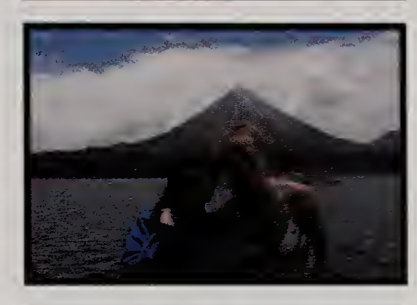
Close up is a week long journey into the workings of our government. During this time MVRHS students are able to meet other kids from across the country, which can be a big culture shock. Between going to the Capital building and hanging around the White House Close Up is a week that you will never forget!



Costa Rica





Over the 2006 April Vacation Mrs. Bennett and Mrs. Swanson took the science club to Costa Rica. Students were able to see all parts of Costa Rica, from cities, to countries, to rainforests. In La Foruna they visited the La Paz waterfall, took a river boat tour of the Volcano Arinal, and attended a Native Dance Performance. In Sarapiqui the group was able to go white water rafting, zip-line through the rainforest, and visit the Selva Verde Biological Reserch Center. The students were lucky enough to go to Pueto Viejo and relax on the beach and take a nature hike. The trip ended with attending a flee market in San Jose, pr ing the fun tri !

Exchange

Name: Gonzalo Zelaya
Home Country: Peru
Length of Stay: September 2006 - July 2007
Age/Grade: 18 senior
Favorite MVRHS class: Intro to film
MVRHS Activities: Soccer team
Years of English before coming to the U.S: 11

How is Martha's Vineyard different then you expected?
It is alot bigger, really quiet and there is horrible cell phone reception.

Gonzalo has always wanted to do an exchange to the United States, although he has visited the U.S. 5 times. Gonzalo knew two years ago that he would be coming to Martha's Vineyard, so he had a long time to prepare. He finds the hardest part about the exchange the strict driving rules. "In Peru I could drive whereever I wanted, but here the exchange rules will not allow me."

Gonzalo is planning a trip to Pennsylvania with 30-40 other Rotary exchange students, and is very excited to see another part of the U.S.

Students

Name: Marthe Gronnbech Hafskjold
Home Country: Norway
Length of Stay: The 2007 school year
Age/Grade: 17, Senior
Years of English before coming to the US: 8

How is Martha's Vineyard different then you expected?
The people are more outgoing than I had expected.

Marthe chose to come to the United States because of the English language. She felt prepared lingually but was not as prepared for the culture shock.

In the spring Marthe is planning a trip to California and hopes to make it to New York City soon.

The Boy Who

A long time ago, in a little Japanese village, there lived a poor farmer, with his wife and family. The oldest son was strong and healthy and helped the farmer in the fields every day, planting and harvesting the rice. The two daughters worked with their mother in the house and the garden. They they had been able to work hard from the time they were very little . But the youngest son, although he was extremely clever, was also quite small. He could not work in the rice fields with his father and brother.

One day the boy's parents began to discuss his future, since he was not suited to being a farmer. His mother said, "our younger son is very clever. Perhaps we should apprentice him to the priest in the village temple. The father agreed that their son's cleverness might make him a suitable candidate for the temple. So the boy's parents went to the village temple to ask the priest to take their son as an acolyte.

The the old priest agreed to take the boy as an acolyte, with the understanding that the boy would obey him in everything. The boy tried very hard to obey and he learned many things, but he had one failing. When he should have been studying his lessons on his own, the boy would draw instead. He could not help himself, for he was an artist at heart. More than anything he liked to draw cats. He drew cats on his lessons, he drew cats on the floor, he drew cats on the walls and, worst of all, he drew cats on the big, white, rice paper screens in the temple itself.
The old priest was angry, and told the boy that drawing cats when he should be studying was wrong. Soon the priest grew too frustrated, and told the boy that he must pack his belongings and go home, for an acolyte must obey the priest in all things. He packed his few belongings into a bundle and walked down to the main road.

When the little boy reached the road, he thought, If I go home, my father will be angry and will punish me. And so, without knowing quite why, the boy headed east. He walked for many hours, deep into the night until he arrived at the gates of a town.
It was pitch-dark when the boy arrived, but he saw one lamp burning in a window, and so he headed for it, seeking shelter from the cold. He was overjoyed to see that it was a temple, thinking he might have another try at succeeding at his studies. Boldly, he walked up to the temple door and knocked on it. Because there was no answer, he knocked several more times. When there still was no answer, he turned the handle and pushed on the door. It swung wide open, and the boy walked in calling, "is anyone here?" No one answered him, but he thought that a priest would come by eventually, so he went in and sat down to wait.

Drew Cats

While he was waiting, he opened the drawer in a table and saw some pens and ink. He could not contain himself, and he began to draw cats on the floor. He just couldn't stop there; he had to draw cats on the white, paper screens in the temple. He drew and drew until they were covered with cats. When he had filled the screens with pictures of every kind of cat he could imagine, the little boy was very tired. He found a tiny cupboard in the little room near the door and climbed into it with his parcel of clothes. He shut the cabinet door and was soon fast asleep on a shelf, with his bundle for a pillow. In the middle of the night, the boy heard a loud sound of fighting. He couldn't see anything and he was so frightened that he just closed the cabinet door and stayed inside.

In the morning the boy opened the cupboard and crawled out. He tiptoed out of the little room and peeked into the temple. What a surprise! There was an immense rat lying dead on the temple floor. The boy was in shock until he looked at the temple screens. Each cat that he had drawn had a little circle of red around its mouth. Then the boy knew that his cats had attacked and killed the rat! When the people of the city discovered that the monster had been defeated, they proclaimed the boy a hero. The priests of that temple would have been happy to take him as an acolyte, but the little boy had changed his mind. He did not become an acolyte or a priest. He became an artist instead, and his paintings of cats were famous in all of Japan. Perhaps if you go there, you will see one.

Musician Profile

"My frame of mind is that as a performer, I am more interested with technically interesting rhythms in the music I listen to and play. Jazz to me is the best of all worlds in music; the most rich, the most nuanced, and artistic. There's a lot going on, and there's really no limit as to what you can do." Mike Alberice, a junior, is a drummer in the school jazz band, and performs every Sunday at Offshore Ale with the Jazz Fellowship.

He has been playing the drums since junior high, and like most, started off playing covers of the likes of Nirvana and Blink 182. But now if you were to ask him he would say that repeating rap and rock beats is boring for him, he prefers the intricacy of jazz, and now lists his biggest influences as John Coltrane for his dedication and ethics, and Miles Davis for his style.

As far as the jazz program at the high school goes, he says it is a lot of fun, and "awesome because it provides an opportunity to jam in school," but sometimes he wishes that there was more commitment involved. As far as influencing his music, his weekly jams with the Jazz fellowship are a bigger factor. Part of the reason for this is the level of skill of the people he plays with there, and another part is the level of seriousness that the audience brings. On playing for an audience Mike says that it adds a little pressure, which is good, because it forces him to give 100%, but it is not too much pressure as to take away from the fun of the experience.

Mike Wants to pursue music after high school, but is wary of going exclusively into music; "after all, there is so much out there, as much as I love drumming, there is also tons more things that I want to see and do."

The Twelve

There was once a king who had twelve beautiful daughters. They slept in twelve bed all in one room; and when they went to bed, the doors were shut and locked up; but every morn ing their shoes were found to be quite worn through as if they had been danced in all night; an yet nobody could find out how it happened, or where they had been.

Then the king made it known to all the land, that if any person could discover the secret, an find out where it was that the princesses danced in the night, he should have the one he like best for his wife, and should be king after his death; but whoever tried and did not succeed, aft three days and nights, should be put to death.

A king's son soon came. He was well entertained, and in the evening was taken to the chamb next to the one where the princesses lay in their twelve beds. There he was to sit and wat where they went to dance; and, in order that nothing might pass without his hearing it, the do of his chamber was left open. But the princesses gave the king's son a glass of enchanted wi and he soon fell asleep; when he awoke in the morning he found that the princesses had all be dancing, for the soles of their shoes were full of holes. The same thing happened the second an third night: so the king ordered his head to be cut off. After him came several others; but th had all the same luck, and all lost their lives in the same manner.

Not far from the palace lived a young goat-herd named Michael. When he heard the kin proclamation he too wanted to solve the mystery, but he knew that since he was not a prin he would never be allowed to try. So he went to the palace and was taken on as the garden boy.

One night when the princesses went to bed Michael put on a cloak which made him invisib and crept into their room. He saw the princesses open their drawers, and take out all their fi clothes, and skip about as if they were eager to begin dancing. The eldest went up to her ow bed and clapped her hands, and the bed sank into the floor and a trapdoor flew open. Micha followed close behind them, as the princesses walked down a hidden staircase; but in the mid of the stairs he trod on the gown of the youngest princess, and she cried out to her sisters, 'All not right; someone took hold of my gown.' 'You silly creature!' said the eldest, 'it is nothing b a nail in the wall.'

Dancing Princesses

Then down they all went, and at the bottom they found themselves in a most delightful grove of trees; and the leaves were all of silver, and glittered and sparkled beautifully. Michael wished to take away some token of the place; so he broke off a little branch.. They then came to another grove of trees, where all the leaves were of gold; and afterwards to a third, where the leaves were all glittering diamonds. And Michael broke a branch from each; and every time there was a loud noise, which made the youngest sister tremble with fear; but the eldest still said, it was only the princes, who were crying for joy. So they went on till they came to a great lake; and at the side of the lake there lay twelve little boats with twelve handsome princes in them, who rowed the princesses across the lake.

On the other side of the lake stood a fine illuminated castle, from which came the merry music of horns and trumpets. There they all landed, and went into the castle, and each prince danced with his princess; and Michael, who was all the time invisible, danced with them too. They danced on till the cock crowed, and then the eldest princess cried "Hurry, get the wine the princes must drink it or the enchantment will be broken. A cup of wine was passed round, and all the princes took a drink. The princes then rowed them back over the lake and on the opposite shore they took leave of each other, the princesses promising to come again the next night.

When they came to the stairs, Michael ran on before the princesses. In the morning Michael said nothing about what had happened, but determined to see more of this strange adventure, and went again the second and third night; and every thing happened just as before; the princesses danced each time till their shoes were worn to pieces, and then returned home.

Michael came before the king, and told him that he had discovered the secret. And when the king asked him. 'Where do my twelve daughters dance at night?' He answered, 'With twelve enchanted princes in a castle under ground. And then he told the king all that had happened, and showed him the three branches which he had brought with him. Then the king called for the princesses, and asked them whether what Michael said was true: and when they saw that they were discovered, they confessed it all, and the spell was broken. And the king asked Michael which of them he would choose for his wife; and he of course chose the youngest, for she was the best dancer of them all!

John

Now John Henry was a mighty man, yes sir. He was born a slave in the 1840's but was freed after the war. He went to work as a steel-driver for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, don't ya know. And John Henry was the strongest, the most powerful man working the rails.

John Henry, he would spend his day's drilling holes by hitting thick steel spikes into rock with his faithful shaker crouching close to the hole, turning the drill after each mighty blow. There was no one who could match him, though many tried.

Well, the new railroad was moving along right quick, thanks in no little part to the mighty John Henry. But looming right smack in its path was a mighty enemy - the Big Bend Mountain. Now the big bosses at the C&O Railroad decided that they couldn't go around the mile and a quarter thick mountain. No sir, the men of the C&O were going to go through it - drilling right into the heart of the mountain.

A thousand men would lose their lives before the great enemy was conquered. It took three long years, and before it was done the ground outside the mountain was filled with makeshift, sandy graves. The new tunnels were filled with smoke and dust. Ya couldn't see no-how and could hardly breathe. But John Henry, he worked tirelessly, drilling wit a 14-pound hammer, and going 10 to 12 feet in one workday. No one else could match him.

Then one day a salesman came along to the camp. He had a steam-powered drill and claimed it could out-drill any man. Well, they set up a contest then and there between John Henry and that there drill. The foreman ran that newfangled steam-drill. John Henry, he just pulled out two 20-pound hammers, one in each hand. They drilled and drilled, dust rising everywhere. The men were howling and cheering. At the end of 35 minutes, John Henry had drilled two seven foot holes – a total of fourteen feet, while the steam drill had only drilled one nine-foot hole.

Henry

John Henry held up his hammers in triumph! The men shouted and cheered. The noise was so loud, it took a moment for the men to realize that John Henry was tottering. Exhausted, the mighty man crashed to the ground, the hammer's rolling from his grasp. The crowd went silent as the foreman rushed to his side. But it was too late. A blood vessel had burst in his brain. The greatest driller in the O&R Railroad was dead.

Some folks say that John Henry's likeness is carved right into the rock inside the Big Bend Tunnel. And if you walk to the edge of the blackness of the tunnel, sometimes you can hear the sound of two 20-pound hammers drilling their way to victory over the machine.

Vocational

In addition to academics, MVRHS offers a wide variety of vocational education courses. These courses train students in the fields of automotive mechanics, horticulture, early childhood education, building trades, and the culinary arts. "The Vocational Department strives to provide an educational experience that encourages participation in any area for any student regardless of gender. The educational experience takes place in the classroom and the community with a strong emphasis on transition from school to the world of employment." (MVRHS.org)

Students from the horticulture department engage in public works projects for the benefit of the community. In addition to working in the MVRHS greenhouse, where they have grown hydroponic plants, and have experimented with fish farming, horticulture students take their skills to the road, shown here planting in Ocean park, Oak Bluffs.

Jeff Canha (right) is the automotive and marine technology teacher here at MVRHS. In his class students learn such life skills as the workings of an engine, and leave the program with the knowledge needed to maintain and repair their own vehicles, in addition to skills need ed for making a living in the field.

The building trades department teaches students basic usage of hand and power tools, and concepts of building and architectural design. Students build sheds like the one at right; beginner students may shingle or do other smaller jobs, while more advanced students learn to build the sheds from the ground up.

The culinary arts department is a training ground for serious cooks. Whether you are going to school for food preperation, or just enjoy the art of creating a meal, this course is for you. Students of the culinary arts also cook for community events, and donate the fruits of their hard labor to community suppers and events.

Early childhood education will "prepare students for careers in early childhood education. On-site work experiences and observations in licensed group child care facilities enables students to accrue required center experience for teacher certification. Projects and research result in an assortment of hand made teaching tools by students for use in the field." Students work with actual children, like the child at right.

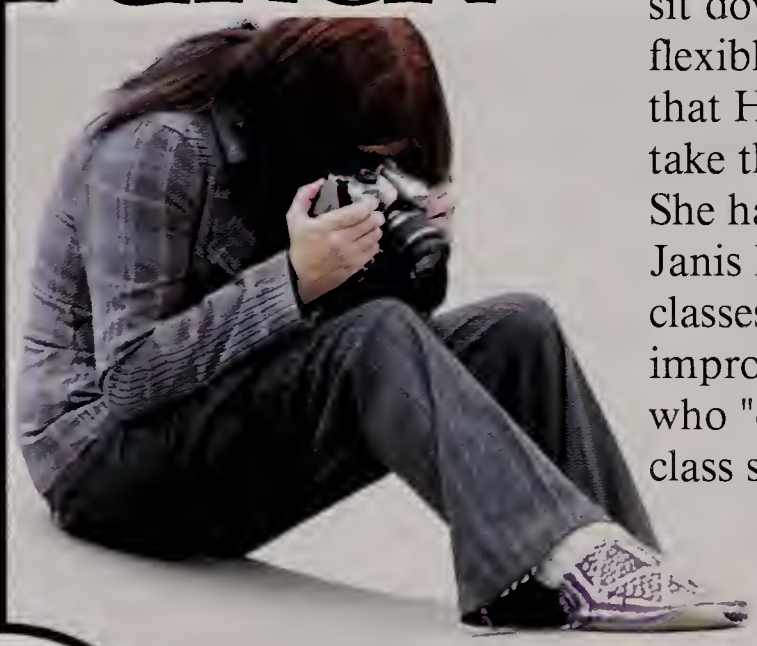
Ryan Gorman

Ryan Gorman is a senior enrolled in the MVRHS culinary program After he graduates he plans to study the culinary arts at Carnagie Mellon with a focus on deserts. This one of his favorite original recipes; mint oreo ice cream.

3 eggs
1 cup sugar
1 cup half & half
2 cups heavy cream
1.5 tsp. mint extract
20 oreos

1) Simmer one half cup sugar, half & half, and heavy cream.
2)Cook one half cup sugar and eggs
3) Mix the egg mixture with the cream mixture, and add mint extract.
4) Chill, and use ice cream maker
5) Mix in chopped oreos

Hayley Panek



Hayley Panek is a sophomore at The Rebecca Amos Institute. She is a new student there having attended MVRHS for over a year. She says that prior to enrolling in Amos she was doing badly in school, and wasn't doing her work. She says that the smaller class sizes and more personal attention at Amos have forced her to begin doing her work. "There isn't an opportunity to not do work, you just sit down and do it." She likes the small classes and more flexible schedule available at Amos. The main problem that Hayley runs into is that it is much harder for her to take the art electives that she enjoyed while at MVRHS. She has set up an independent study with art teacher Janis Frame, but she misses being able to take "regular art classes." Hayley says that she has had instant academic improvement at Amos, and would recommend it to people who "can't handle the high school, or struggle with bigger class sizes."

The Rebecca Amos Institute

At the beginning of every school year, students and teachers of the Rebecca Amos Institute attend a three day retreat in Craigville, Massachusetts where they dedicate themselves to the educational process. At this time, courses are chosen, goals are set, and a team/family atmosphere is established that will continue throughout the academic year. Because they are actively involved in choices regarding their schedules and courses, students experience a sense of ownership in their education. Most come away from this retreat inspired and revived as a team. (MVRHS.org)

The Duration

When God had created the world and was about to fix the length of each creature's life, the ass came and asked, "Lord, how long shall I live?"

"Thirty years," replied God; "does that content thee?"

"Ah, Lord," answered the ass, "that is a long time. Think of my painful existence! To carry heavy burdens from morning to night, to drag sacks of corn to the mill, that others may eat bread, to be cheered and refreshed with nothing but blows and kicks. Relieve me of a portion of this long time."

Then God had pity on him and relieved him of eighteen years. The ass went away comforted, and the dog appeared.

"How long wouldst thou like to live?" said God to him. "Thirty years are too many for the ass, but thou wilt be satisfied with that."

"Lord," answered the dog, "is that thy will? Consider how I shall have to run, my feet will never hold out so long, and when I have once lost my voice for barking, and my teeth for biting, what will be left for me to do but run from one corner to another and growl?"

God saw that he was right, and released him from twelve years of life. Then came the monkey. "Thou wilt certainly live thirty years willingly?" said the Lord to him. "Thou hast no need to work as the ass and the dog have to do, and wilt always enjoy thyself."

"Ah! Lord," he answered, "it may seem as if that were the case, but it is quite different. When it rains porridge I have no spoon. I am always to play merry pranks, and make faces which force people to laugh, and if they give me an apple, and I bite into it, why it is sour! How often sadness hides itself behind mirth! I shall never be able to hold out for thirty years."

God was gracious and took off ten.

Of Life

At last man appeared, joyous, healthy and vigorous, and begged God to appoint his time for him.

"Thirty years shalt thou live," said the Lord. "Is that enough for thee?"

"What a short time," cried man, "when I have built my house and my fire burns on my own hearth; when I have planted trees which blossom and bear fruit, and am just intending to enjoy my life, I am to die! O Lord, lengthen my time."

"I will add to it the ass's eighteen years," said God.

"That is not enough," replied the man.

"Thou shalt also have the dog's twelve years."

"Still too little!"

"Well, then," said God, "I will give thee the monkey's ten years also, but more thou shalt not have."

The man went away, but was not satisfied.

Walker Roman illustration

So man lives seventy years. The first thirty are his human years, which are soon gone; then is he healthy, merry, works with pleasure, and is glad of his life. Then follow the ass's eighteen years, when one burden after another is laid on him, he has to carry the corn which feeds others, and blows and kicks are the reward of his faithful services. Then come the dog's twelve years, when he lies in the corner, and growls and has no longer any teeth to bite with, and when this time is over the monkey's ten years form the end. Then man is weak- headed and foolish, does silly things, and becomes the jest of the children.

Junior Profiles

Evan is a 17 year old junior. He was born here, so he is an "islander." He is the 4th of 5 brothers. His musical influences include Sunset Rubdown, Swan Lake, and Wolf Parade. During his summers he works at a summer camp in Maine called Camp Wigwam. During the school year he does Cross Country and LAX. Evan will admit he isn't very happy with the scheduling this year. It limits the amount of art classes he can take. Crafts and sculpture class he enjoys a lot. On occasion he goes to the movies with friends, and enjoys eating curries and Moose Tracks ice cream. Evan is a member of Minnesingers, and participates in school plays. He also plays violin. After high school is over Evan plans on attending a small liberal arts college in the Northeast.

Evan Kendall

Olivia is a junior this year. She has a younger sister who is a freshman and another in 4th grade. Her mom is a French teacher at the high school here. Olivia was born on the island, so she is considered an official "islander." Currently in school she enjoys her drawing and music classes. Piano and guitar also take up a lot of her time outside of school. Friends she always has time for though. They are a big part of her life. She enjoys going to the movies on occasion. Scary ones can be tough to sit through for her, but she loves them. She'll admit she eats Nutella right out of the jar sometimes. But usually she watches what she eats. Beck and the Beatles are a few of her favorite artists. They have a big influence on the music she plays. After high school she plans on going to college, although she is not sure for what yet. Art school is a good possibility though. Olivia enjoys school for the most part, but will be very happy once she graduates. No matter what she does after high school, she hopes to include music and art in her life to some extent.

Junior Life

For Thomas Knowles, yu-gi-o is life. No, I'm just kidding, but it does seem to be a hobby of his judging from his proud display of "Armed Dragon level 3"

Every picture on this page was taken off the website "Myspace.com." Sites such as Myspace serve as a place to post pictures music and video, as well as a way to send messages and post public comments to friends. Myspace is immensely popular among juniors, and the entire high school for that matter. This in itself says a something about how juniors spend their time outside of school.

Many juniors participated in the annual wood kilm firing at Featherstone. Some had pottery in the firing, and others just came for the good experience. A good time was had by all.

Firstly I want to thank all the teachers who helped me get through high school, especially Mr. Malowski, Mrs. Cakkahan and Mr. Dodge. Also my friends and family here and in Uruguay. Most of all i would like to thank my sister and my parents, because if it wasn't for them I wouldn't be who I am today. I really want to say thank you to all the people who did things to stop the racism in the school and make it a better place for everyone, like the race cultural retrete. I think you did an excellant job and I hope someday you can accomplish your goals. So I want to thank all the students who were in that retreat and the teachers who organized it: Mr. McCarthy, Mr. Malowski, Mrs. MacDonald, Mrs. Gault, Tony, Mr. Nixon and Mrs. Regan. The good time's of today are the sad thoughts of tomorrow
---Bob Marley

Connor V. Rasmussen

A boat, beneath a sunny sky
Lingering onward dreamily
In an evening of July—

Children three that nestle near,
Eager eye and willing ear,
Pleased a simple tale to hear—

Long has paled that sunny sky;
Echoes fade and memories die:
Autumn frosts have slain July.

Still she haunts me, phantomwise,
Alice moving under skies
Never seen by waking eyes.

Children yet, the tale to hear,
Eager eye and willing ear,
Lovingly shall nestle near.

In a Wonderland they lie,
Dreaming as the days go by,
Dreaming as the summers die:

Ever drifting down the stream—
Lingering in the golden gleam—
Life, what is it but a dream?

For a long time it had seemed to me that life was about to be begin--real life. But there was always some obstacle in the way, something to be gotten through first, some unfinished business, time still to be served, a debt to be paid. Then life would begin. At last it dawned on me that these obstacles were my life. -Alfred D. Souza

Thanx mom for bringin' me into this world and always bein' there for me. I couldn't have come this far without you. Thank you for the freedom you gave me, instead of keepin me on a tight leash. It let me experience the world for myself. It helped me learn all of life's lessons by personal experience. I may have messed up over the years, but look at me now--im goin' to college! Thank you for not only bein' my mother, but bein' a friend. Most of all thanx for all the support you've given me over the yearz. I LOVE U MA!

Each small act of kindness reverberates across great distances and spans of time, affecting lives unknown to the one whose generous spirit was the source of this good echo, because kindness is passed on and grows each time it is passed, until a simple courtesy becomes an act of selfless courage years later and far away. Likewise, each small meaness, each expression of hatred, each act of evil.

In addition to our hardworking staff, the yearbook would like to thank all those who contributed art, text, and photography. The book would not have been possible without you. First a thanks to our artists; Gaby Sullo, Walker Roman, Mike Alberice, Maggi Saul, Allison Kiley Eliott, Alexis Weisman, and Claire Lindsey (cover). In addition we would like to thank the MV Times, and Jumpopix.com for their generosity with sports photography. Also student contributors of photos: Colin Day, Tessa Wall, Abbey Entner, Anele Davis, in addition to many others. Thanks to the brothers Grimm for inspiring the theme of this yearbook. Thanks to Fernanda Laiana, and Kenya Rodreguez. Thanks to our advertisers who made this book possible, and to you, the reader, for showing your support and buying a book.

Dedication

This book is dedicated to the mad ones. The ones who's names were misspelled, the ones who were left off of the roster of their sports team, or the ones who were somehow left out altogether. This yearbook sought to represent the school totally and accurately, but if we failed in doing so it was not for lack of effort.

MVRHS

The Yearbook Staff

This page is dedicated the hard working staff of individuals who made the yearbook possible, and everything it is this year. Whether they are taking the yearbook elective class or have been loyally attending yearbook club after school on Thursdays this could not have been possible without all of their tremendous efforts individually and as a group.
